

good taste

Helping clients put the finishing touches on home décor is one part good design, one part pure psychology. Karen Kline, owner of the recently opened Spice Hill Interiors in Ossining, brings both to the table: an education from Parsons and a BA in psychology (plus a law degree tossed into the mix). Offering private interior-design services to Westchester clients since 1999, Kline now reaches out to a broader clientele with her new boutique, which offers high-end wallcoverings, window treatments, and custom upholstered furniture at below-retail prices. Kline works with high-end fabric companies such as Romo, Osborne & Little, Rogers & Goffigon, Robert Allen, and Kravet, as well as several upholstery lines including Swaim and a custom private line.
